The Troubles of a Widow.
Editor Stone, the venerable editor of the New York Journal of Commerce, has been the victim of a singular persecution for several months past. Some time last year Mr. Stone had the misfortune to lose his wife, and from that hour he has been in a peck of trouble.

The greatest annoyance to which Mr. Stone is subjected comes from the widow. The old gentleman, who is past the age of seventy, says that one day he was called to see her two homes and take care of his mansion for him, because she was so fond of flowers, and she thought that his magnificent conservatory needed her personal attention. A widow in Pennsylvania wrote to him three times. She piled his loneliness, and wanted to take care of him. Then the widow began to call. They came from Brooklyn and everywhere. They declined to state their business to the servant, and insisted upon seeing him personally. Finally Mr. Stone put up the following card in the hall of his residence:

Stone declines to see ladies who are strangers to him, unless distinctly informed of the purpose of their business.

This afforded some relief, but the persecuted editor had other troubles. He had always been in the habit of sending flowers to several ladies in the church choir, and in a short time people began to talk, and he was charged with having matrimonial designs. In his wrath he denied these reports, and requested a newspaper friend to publish the following in the event of his marriage:

Mr. Stone, who was once possessed of some common sense, has now passed into the hands of a madman. He has lost the mental power with which he was originally endowed.

At present the wretched journalist is in a state of siege when he is at home, and he has to be conveyed to his office in a close carriage. Sometimes the dread of being kidnapped by some determined female admirer causes a cold shiver to run down his spinal column, but he indulges the hope that his unflagging vigilance will enable him to baffle his fair pursuers. The situation excites the liveliest interest in New York, and it is the general verdict that the game in view is worth the trouble of a protracted chase. Mr. Stone may yet play Jack Bunsby to some Mrs. MacStinger.

There is a movement in New York to abolish the hotel register. Will this cause the gentlemanly clerk to discard the diamond pin? If so, we are opposed to it.

There is no Danger.
In an interesting review of a case now pending in the federal supreme court, Mr. McCreary D. Conway suggests a new danger.

The case referred to involves certain constitutional questions, and the decision of the court will determine whether or not a state can be sued by one of its own citizens. If the court decides that a citizen cannot sue, Mr. Conway expresses the opinion that there is nothing in the constitution to prevent a state from turning a portion of its population into serfs, as under a recent ruling no test cases will be allowed, and the citizens forced into serfdom by a state would have no remedy.

Mr. Conway makes himself very entertaining in his discussion of the matter, but it will strike most people that his fears are groundless. Not very far back in the history of this country serfdom, or rather actual slavery existed in many states. There was nothing in the constitution against it, but the federal government, without bothering itself concerning the legal aspect of the case, swept the whole system out of existence. What occurred then would occur again, if any state should establish serfdom. No matter whether the constitution is silent or not in regard to the enforcement of the rights of citizens in such a position, their fellow-countrymen would find a remedy, even if they had to inaugurate a revolution.

But, on the other hand, does Mr. Conway desire to see a citizen given the right to sue his state, and the power to enforce a judgment in his favor? Such a state of affairs would be about as bad as a perpetual internecine war. There would be no end of trouble, and the states would be so worried and harassed by the courts and their officers that they would gladly surrender their statehood and seek shelter in a nation without a vestige of local self-government. This would be a calamity, and it looms up much more threateningly than the imaginary evil pointed out by Mr. Conway.

A New Hampshire congressman denies that congressmen are dissipated. We agree with the New Hampshire man. How can a congressman be dissipated when a dead lock closes everything but a restaurant and a barber shop?

Dutty For Oklahoma.
A town ruled by women!

Such is the town of Okaloosa, a little village of more than a thousand population in the eastern part of Kansas.

This remarkable little place has been controlled ever since it has been a corporation, just like all other corporations—by men. Of late, however, its enterprising citizens, who circulated it among the town, refused to grow in various ways, principally in that it refused to grant the numerous improvements asked for by its citizens. The public spirited citizens of the place saw that something must be done, and determining upon a radical change in the management of the city, several prominent citizens concluded to put up a ticket composed of women in the election of mayor and council.

Dr. Balsey, a prominent republican, who circulated it among the business men, receiving their hearty endorsement, all united in the statement that the town needed many improvements which previous administrations had failed to attend to.

Mrs. Mary L. Layman was nominated for mayor, and backed by a combination of five of the wives of well known citizens of the town. This ticket was given to the public under the suggestive title of the "Okaloosa Improvement Ticket." Of course, the men of the town who had been in control for so many years, refused to give up without a fight, and they nominated a ticket, which they called the "Retrenchment and Reform Ticket." It is needless to say that the enthusiasm was so great that the woman's ticket was elected by an overwhelming majority. Brass bands paraded the streets, and such a scene of excitement and joy was never before witnessed in the quiet little village of Okaloosa.

After the election, however, Dr. Balsey, who is an active republican, found to his horror a majority of the newly elected ticket to be democrats. Even his own wife, a council lady-elect, announced herself a dyed-in-the-wool democrat. The doctor was consoled, however, in discovering that Mrs. Critchfield, the wife of the democratic postmaster, still clung to her republican faith, and avowed that she would not be influenced by the politics of her husband. The new council has been in control less than a week, and already wonderful improvements have been made in the remarkable little village.

On last Saturday it was determined by the newly elected council to make a visit to Kansas City for the purpose of making certain investigations in which they hoped to be benefited in their municipal administration. At the last moment, however, the contemplated visit met with a sad reverse, one of the ladies refusing to leave, as her baby was sick, and she would not leave it to the care of an incompetent husband. All of the members of the council united in endorsing her position, and agreed to postpone the visit until another day. This has the right ring about it, and shows that under the control of such women there can be no question as to the glorious future awaiting the town of Okaloosa.

The Chicago Times threatens to become an organ of the Purse Merchant.

Cleveland, the Man.
The New York Sun thinks that an editorial recently appearing in these columns is the most important political article that has been written during the past five years. The Sun alludes to the remarks we made in regard to the rumor that Mr. Cleveland would decline to be a candidate for a second term.

The Sun's comments are very flattering indeed, but the article in question is important only to the extent that it represents the common sense of the democratic party. There are perhaps other democrats who would be available as presidential candidates, but there are none who could win a victory on the platform that is mapped out in Mr. Cleveland's message except Mr. Cleveland himself.

We suppose, of course, that the Sun understands this perfectly. Neither Hill nor Randall could be candidates on the platform which Mr. Cleveland has mapped out, because neither has committed himself to the views therein contained.

There is another view which the Sun may or may not appreciate, and it is this: A democratic victory in 1888 is much more important to the south than the success of either protection or free trade ideas. A republican victory means disaster to the best interests of the south, and for that reason we want to see Mr. Cleveland make the race again, no matter what his platform may be.

In our opinion the postoffice department was instituted for the convenience of the public and not for the purpose of harrasing newspaper and magazine publishers.

State Rights on Top.
The decision of the supreme court to the effect that a state legislature may absolutely prohibit the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine is about the extreme assertion of the doctrine of state rights that has been made since the war.

The case which the court has decided went up from Pennsylvania, and was based on a legislative statute which prevents the sale in that state of a cheap article of food known as oleomargarine. When the bill, which has since become an act, was before the legislature, the manufacturers of oleomargarine sought an opportunity to prove that the article was neither deleterious to health nor unwholesome as food. They were not permitted to do so, and the legislature in its folly and blindness went forward and prohibited the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine.

The supreme court now says that the legislature had a perfect right to pass this act, and that the character of the food which a state may suppress is not open to proof or discussion. These matters are questions to be determined by the legislatures.

It will be perceived that the supreme court has given the legislatures a very wide field in which to exercise their activities, and we may be sure that they will not be slow to take advantage of it.

Their dead-lock in the house has been broken and the country will be glad to hear it. The direct tax bill is not as important as some other bills, and its postponement to December might have been made at first.

Corruption in Rhode Island.
The Rhode Island voters who put up their votes to the highest bidder had what the boys call a regular picnic. The republican candidate for lieutenant governor, Enos Lapham, was not a satisfactory one, and his nomination created some dissension in the republican ranks. The Providence Journal, the leading republican organ in the state, refused to support Lapham, and it was well known that all decent republicans in the state would scratch his name from the ticket.

But Enos was shrewder than his opponents. Having a thorough knowledge of the character of the average Rhode Island voter, he laid his plans accordingly. He established agencies throughout the state, and his greatest activity was displayed in his own town, and there he succeeded in buying nearly enough votes to offset the defection of the other party of the state.

Mr. Lapham lives in Warwick, and he made early arrangements to convince the voters there that he was one of the ablest citizens to be found in the country. According to the correspondent of the New York Evening Post, "Uncle" Enos laid his plans so as to receive an endorsement from the voters of his own town—his friends, neighbors and acquaintances.

In order to make this endorsement sure, he established three several headquarters, where his friends might go when they felt in the humor. One of these places was a stall in "Uncle" Enos's barn. Another was a barroom, and there were several others in various parts of the town.

Lapham's hired voters went to the polls, received their tickets from the hands of a Lapham agent, and were given a brass check as they deposited their ballots. These checks were presented at the barn stall or at the other Lapham pay stations and were promptly cashed. This performance went on in other towns, but not to the same extent. "Uncle" Enos got his endorsement, but the voters made him pay for it.

Under the rulings of the third assistant postmaster-general, no new publication can be successfully started until it has a bona fide subscription list. This is going it rather strong.

Tan Hong. JOHN L. SULLIVAN offers to meet any man in the world for $10,000. This may satisfy him that he is a better man than Mitchell, but it will not cause the public to change its opinion that the Hon. John's wings have been clipped.

Mr. Conkling's illness dates from the New York blizzard, when he caught a severe cold in walking from his office, on Wall street, to the Hoffman house. It will never be definitely known how much sickness and suffering and how many deaths were occasioned by that terrible blizzard.

Governor Hill of New York, has vetoed a bill making certain changes in the police system of Brooklyn, and providing that the chief commissioners shall be retired with a pension after a service of twenty years. The governor says that such officers are exposed to no more dangers than any other men, and there is no more reason why they should be pensioned than commissioners of education or any other similar officers. As has been frequently remarked before, Governor David Bennett Hill has a very long head.

With two state prohibition conventions, Georgia politics cannot be said to lack variety.

ROBERT CONKLING'S desire to have Ed Stokes at his bedside was doubtless one of the old fancies of a sick man. There is a big difference in the tastes, aspirations and social position of the ex-senator and the ex-convict.

WHAT THE PEOPLE want is an actor whose appearance in tragedy will make everybody laugh. The late Count Jonnes tickled the New Yorkers for many years as a Shakespearean tragedian, and his mantle appears to have fallen upon one James O'Connor, who recently startled the metropolis in the role of Hamlet. Mr. O'Connor's general make-up is a little out of the ordinary line, and his squeaky voice and hollow laugh are not harmonious with the popular idea of Hamlet. Perhaps it is on this very account that he draws crowded houses. His audiences laugh until they cry, and thus all the effects of tragedy and farce are produced in the same play.

MATTHEW ARNOLD, our critical Englishman, objects to this country chiefly because it lacks beauty and interest, and the names of the houses are so odd. Did Mr. Arnold visit Oskosh, Kalamazoo and the Piscataquis?

THE FARMERS' ALLIANCE entered North Carolina about a year ago. It now has 680 sub-alliances in the state with 22,000 members. The Knights of Labor are losing strength and the new order is overshadowing everything.

THE RUSSIAN HAVE pushed their trans-Caspian railway past the city of Bokhara, and in six or eight weeks the line will reach Samarcand, the ancient capital of Tamerlane. In these quiet old towns so long cut off from civilization the Russian drums beat in the morning, noon and night. Nothing in the present century is more wonderful than the movement which has carried the star of empire into these far off lands of the east.

SCENE: NEW YORK MAIL and Express editorial room. Proprietor Elliott F. Shephard to Editor Bundy.

"Major, have you a text for tomorrow?"

"No, sir; it is Foster Coates's time."

"Mr. Coates, what have you?"

"Good sir, I have almost exhausted my stock," replied the managing editor, "but how little a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush."

"Amen," quoth Major Bundy—"You know more about the Bible than I thought you did."

Exit Proprietor.

Mr. Blaine will sail from Liverpool on the 10th of June. The republican convention will convene in the 19th, and a nomination will probably be made about the time Mr. Blaine is half way across the Atlantic. Can any one imagine what Mr. Blaine's feelings will be during the last half of his trip?

THE POOR, DELUDED Cincinnati Commercial Gazette has gone to the trouble of showing by diagrams that President Cleveland is regarded by the republican officials and the democratic in their places. In the language of General Dragg, we exclaim: "What are we here for, anyway?"

AS SOON as the Widow Butler announces herself in the race for the white house, it may be supposed that the presidential campaign has fairly begun.

PICKED UP IN GEORGIA.
Joel Chandler Harris was discussed by the Woman's Reading club of Columbus last Tuesday evening, and the subject was "The Pick-up Man."

The Georgia editors are anxiously awaiting the appearance of Mrs. Dr. Felton's projected weekly publication, and this looks to be a very big thing.

A tramp at the police station in Augusta the other day astonished the cops by repeating several chapters of the Bible from memory.

The mild winter seems to have kept the old stock last year's makes in good trim, and they are being heard from in every county.

CAUGHT AND CLIPPED.

Says a Cincinnati newspaper: "There is a wealthy young man in this city, worth $100,000, who is content to drive an old wagon for $8 a week, and when he gets his salary he blows it in one night and goes to work the next morning as steady as a long pole."

The little king of Spain is a constant source of disturbance in the royal palace at Madrid. A few days ago he was lost for hours and, as has been related, was finally found in a cupboard. Not long afterward he was taking his midday repast of bread and milk. Not liking the flavor of the milk he suddenly seized the glass and poured its contents over his head. He was feeding him. Then his majesty laughed in a mocking, hearty way and ran off to play with his toys.

Science has done wonders for meteorology. For instance, it has pointed out the old saying—

"It will rain near."

"The presence of a wedge-shaped area of high pressure accompanied by a strong atmospheric circulation, is likely to be succeeded by the advance of a disturbance with playful accompaniments and southerly winds."

The Fall Mail Gazette says the total number of horses which the leading countries of the world can throw into the field of battle is:

Spain, 2,500,000; Austria, 2,500,000; Argentina, 2,500,000; Australia, 2,500,000; Brazil, 2,500,000; Canada, 2,500,000; China, 2,500,000; Denmark, 2,500,000; Germany, 2,500,000; France, 2,500,000; Italy, 2,500,000; Japan, 2,500,000; Mexico, 2,500,000; Netherlands, 2,500,000; Norway, 2,500,000; Portugal, 2,500,000; Russia, 2,500,000; Sweden, 2,500,000; Switzerland, 2,500,000; United States, 2,500,000; Venezuela, 2,500,000; and the world, 2,500,000.

PRINCESS EDITHA.

How Mme. Dis De Bar Figured in Atlanta.

Madame Dis De Bar once played a star engagement in Atlanta. She came, and she was the talk of the city. She was the daughter of the famous Lola Montez and King Ludwig of Bavaria.

Many Atlantians will remember her. No body knew whence she came and nobody knew whether she departed when she did depart. But while she was here the people saw and heard a great deal of her.

The date of her visit was some time during 1870. Atlanta was then in the midst of a religious revival, and at a number of churches revivals were being held. The princess, taking advantage of this, came to lecture against Catholicism. She told a tale of distress, claiming that she had escaped from a convent and that she was the victim of great persecutions.

She was a magnificent looking woman of the brunette type of beauty, and was accompanied by a beautiful little girl of about eight years whom she said was her daughter. She was a good man, and she was very kind to the people. She was very intelligent and was very well educated and talked with brilliancy and power.

The "Princess" went to the Dimock house, on Marietta street, near the Arlington house, where she engaged board for a day, but wound up by remaining a week.

At the Dimock house she was met by a man who was a member of the Roman Catholic religion at Concordia hall and on one occasion made a talk in a prayer meeting at the First Baptist church. She was a very good deal of a stir. There was a good deal of mystery surrounding this woman and many believed that she came to Atlanta for some purpose.

It was her custom to take a buggy ride every day while in Atlanta. She got her buggy from a man who was a member of the Roman Catholic religion at Concordia hall and on one occasion made a talk in a prayer meeting at the First Baptist church. She was a very good deal of a stir. There was a good deal of mystery surrounding this woman and many believed that she came to Atlanta for some purpose.

At the end of a week from the time that she went to the Dimock house, the Princess took a buggy ride with her, drove around town for a while, and at length got out of the buggy on a back street. She was a very good deal of a stir. There was a good deal of mystery surrounding this woman and many believed that she came to Atlanta for some purpose.

THE BLIND BIGAMIST.

The Illinois Lady Reaches Atlanta on Time.

Fleming Admits His Guilt and Sol Goldberg is Arrested Charged With Larceny—What the Lady Says.

Fleming, the blind bridegroom, is a victim.

He confessed his guilt yesterday, and in the evening the lady whom he married in Birmingham, Ill., reached Atlanta, and facing him, secured a positive identification in the presence of several witnesses.

Fleming appears to have worked up a sensation wherever he has gone, but Atlanta has been his most successful field, and an interesting chapter has been added in this city to the story of his life.

That chapter tells of the arrest of Sol Goldberg.

Yesterday morning Mrs. Fleming called at police headquarters, and meeting Chief Connolly, requested permission to converse with the prisoner.

The request was granted, and she brought the iron barred doors the handsome lady and the sightless man talked awhile.

Fleming conversed in a low tone, and the lady was equally soft in her speech. No one was standing near, and the officers about the prison could hear nothing that was said.

The lady cried during the interview, and her husband made many caresses to her face, but Fleming was cool, and reaching through the bars placed his hand upon her shoulder, saying:

"Oh, there, none of that. It won't do any good. Be calm."

The lady has proven herself quite brave through the whole ordeal, and in a minute or two turned about, saying:

"I want to see Chief Connolly. Where is he?"

The head of the department was called in, and when the lady informed him that she wanted a conference, he led her to his private office.

There Mrs. Fleming stated that her husband had been broken open sometime Wednesday night and that about $500 in money had been stolen from her. She then described the money carefully, and said that the value from which it had been taken had been cut open.

Chief Connolly heard the story and asked the lady if she had any idea who had taken the money.

"I have," she answered.

"Who?" asked the chief.

"Sol Goldberg."

"The musician?"

"The same."

"And why?"

"Because he knew that the money was there and has been about my home. In fact, I know of no one who knew as much about my affairs and Mr. Fleming's as Sol Goldberg."

The chief's eyes flashed, and he instantly aroused, and sending for Captain Couch and Captain Wright, he instructed them to hunt up Goldberg and investigate the matter.

As the officers went out, the chief turned to the lady and began a discussion of her troubles.

He quickly discovered that her faith in Fleming had been shaken, and as he has all along believed the man guilty, decided to convince her.

"Do you know," he said, "that I think you have been deceived, deceived and injured by the man?"

In her tone there was no indication of the faith she once had in him, and she said that time an evident desire to learn all she could.

The chief looked at the lady a second, and then in his kinder tone he said:

"Oh, I don't know. You see, nearly my entire life has been spent with criminals in one way or another, and I have heard a great deal of human nature. Something tells me that that man is guilty, and that this is not his first offense of the kind. What does he say to you?"

"He declares that there is some mistake. I wonder if he is telling me the truth. God grant that he is. Oh, what I am suffering now!"

The chief glanced at the lady. Tears were flowing down her cheeks, and with a choking sensation in his throat, he said:

"Suppose we have a talk with him together, and see if we can't ascertain something of interest to you."

The lady seemed greatly elated, and clasping her hands, she said:

"Yes, please do."

The prisoner was quickly brought out and in a short time was alone with the lady and the chief. He was calm—just as calm as could be, and when the conversation opened was willing to talk.

The chief walked in and after a few common place remarks had passed he said:

"Fleming, the lady says you married her in Illinois. Will you tell me the truth about it?"

city last night, accompanied by Mr. Harrah, the commonwealth's attorney. They left Illinois yesterday morning, and the presumption was that they could not arrive before this morning.

The Constitution decided to interview with her, and a representative was started yesterday on board a train to meet them in Chattanooga. Just before the train reached Chattanooga, the representative was notified that the lady was in the train which was then due at that place in route to Atlanta.

The transfer with a few autumn leaves, and the train rolled out of Chattanooga the newsmen started through the lady's coach. Near the rear end of the coach a slender man of medium height with a few autumn leaves, and the train rolled out of Chattanooga the newsmen started through the lady's coach.

That gentleman was Mr. Harrah. Just behind him was a lady with a wealth of brown hair. She was resting her head against the back of the seat and in her lap was THE CONSTITUTION. Her face was a pleasant one, and a smile gleamed, though such was upon her. Her head was shrouded in features good, but for a malformation of the nose she would have been pronounced more than ordinarily pretty.

That lady was the one to whom the prisoner was married in Birmingham.

The gentleman was touched upon the shoulder, and as he looked up, he was asked:

"Is this Mr. Harrah?"

"Yes," he answered.

The lady opened her eyes, and as she did so, the newsman said:

"And this is Mrs. Fleming?"

"Yes," she answered.

"Yes, I see that my husband has changed his name as well as his wife since he came to Georgia. I met him as Bishop, and was married to him as Bishop, consequently, the name of the lady is now Bishop."

"And you are now Bishop?" she asked, after a minute's silence.

The situation was explained.

"Oh, then you have seen him?"

"And want you to describe him?"

"That's him. Then, too, I know in another way he is the man."

"Well, I have just been reading THE CONSTITUTION. I see where he says by 'dog.' That gives him away. I have heard him say that expression often."

"When did you marry him?"

"On November 23 last."

"And how long did you live with him?"

"Two days."

"Two days, and then he deserted me, and that away from home. He did not leave me with as much as a pennant bill either."

"Well, I don't mind. You see, he came to Birmingham last fall on a visit to a blind man. My brother-in-law keeps a store, and comes about it all the time. He spent a great portion of his time there, and talked of his up to the mountains. And he is a good talker, isn't he?"

"Yes, he is."

"Well, he finally got into my sister's home, and their I met him. We soon agreed to marry, and did so. See, here my marriage certificate."

The lady produced the certificate.

"So, there can be no doubt about that. Well, we were married on the 23d, and the next evening started to St. Louis. We were going to Florida to spend the winter and back to Montana for the summer. He told me of fabulous wealth, and showed his gold and diamond specimens. Did you ever see them?"

"Did he show you the gold pencil set in emeralds?"

"Well, that came from his mines. Did he show you his watches?"

"Well, one of them his father gave him. Did he show you that twenty dollar gold piece which he took from his brother's pocket after he had been scolded by Indians?"

"Yes."

"Well, then he is the man. Why, I can describe him after a while, which he carries with him."

"But you have forgotten about the marriage."

"Oh, yes, well, we got to St. Louis. The next day he remembered that he had left $1,000 under the carpet at the hotel and had to go back to get it. We got to the depot and he had money enough to buy one ticket and two for the baggage. He finally agreed to go and before the train started, got him to go. Then I went over into East St. Louis, and as I got off, the train had started. He got into Chicago. That was the last time I ever saw him."

"Hear from him?"

"Once, before he left he pressed a piece of coin into my hand. It was a quarter, and with that I got across the river. A day or two later my father received a postal card from him at Springfield and that was the last we knew of him until I wrote in the St. Louis papers Tuesday morning of his marriage. But after he had gone I wrote to Montana, and here is a letter I got."

THE LADY HANDED OUT A LETTER WHICH READ:

A SAD DEATH.

Mrs. Weinmeister Passes Away After a Prolonged Illness.—The funeral services were held at two and three o'clock yesterday morning Mrs. Carl Weinmeister breathed her last.

Six months ago while apparently in the enjoyment of perfect health, she was stricken down and since that time has been confined to her bed. She was a devoted wife and mother, and her death is a great loss to her family.

She was born in the city of Alsted, state of Darmstadt, Germany, and came with her family to America when only five years of age. She lived in the state of Pennsylvania, where seventeen years ago she became the wife of Mr. Carl Weinmeister. They had eight children—three girls and two boys—the eldest, Carl, being thirteen years of age—the youngest, a baby of thirteen months.

A lovely character, a loving wife, a devoted mother, a sincere friend—a noble woman has passed away. Her death is a great loss to her family.

The funeral will take place this afternoon at 4 o'clock at the German Lutheran church, on Forsyth street. Professor Ross, assisted by the choir of the church, will officiate. The services will be held at 4 o'clock.

A SUIR FILED.

Mrs. Mary A. C. Doolittle Seeks to Restrain the E. T. V. & G. Railroad.

Mr. J. H. Lumpkin yesterday filed in the court of the city of Atlanta a bill to restrain the E. T. V. & G. Railroad from the use of the property of the plaintiff by digging a deep cut immediately in front of her land. It is further alleged that the railroad has injured the property of the plaintiff by digging a deep cut immediately in front of her land.
